

Rule 13.20. Select committees

A. The President may establish select committees for specific studies or purposes. He shall appoint the members thereof and designate the chairman. A select committee shall have the same powers, duties, and authorities and shall be subject to the same rules as standing committees.

B. The President also may from time to time call meetings of all members of the Senate as a select committee for the purposes of discussion or study of any administrative matters or for other business he deems advisable to bring before the members. At meetings of such select committee, rules relating to scheduling of meetings, quorum, reports, and minutes and records shall be inapplicable.
